Peel 'n Stick a Nanolite on Your Key - Light Your Way to Key Slots and More -- Simple, Inexpensive, Effective - A VERY Cool Gadget!

September 19, 2008 – So, simple, yet so effective, it's smart, useful and so very inexpensive. That about sums up this cool new gadget, Nanolite, available now through Amazon.com. $3 gets you one, and $12 buys a four-pack.

With a non-replaceable Lithium battery installed, it should provide years of service in the short-burst lighting events for which it is intended – car, home and bike locks and the occasional need to see a menu in a darkened restaurant (though there are better, extended-use solutions – Get a Photon Micro-Lite II or Photon X-Lite Micro – search online for best price).

What sets this product apart is its size, long-lasting performance and simplicity of use – in the dark, take out your key, get near its intended target on your car door's key slot, at your front door or at your bike lock, press the button and the red glow illuminates the target. No fumbling around. It's a one-handed operation.

When I was first sent a sample, about a year ago, I thought it was a great idea, but I had my doubts as far as its ability to stick and stay put on my key. I had visions of quickly recommending it to you and then disappointing you if it became unstuck from the key. I am delighted to report that it has stayed stuck, battered in my pocket by my key bundle and none the worse for wear. It's good to go for all of you, having passed my own rigorous real-world testing in my pocket for these many months. You can see it below on my own keychain.

It comes with an alcohol pad to clean the key's surface before peeling and sticking the light to the key's surface. It's that simple.

I've tested other products for this purpose in the past. There are some that clamp over the top of the key and have replaceable little button cells inside. Those products are ineffectual – batteries fail fast and it's a hassle to replace them. Most users simply give up. This is not so with NanoLite. It's not going to get in anyone's way and it will last a very long time. When it fails, carefully pry it off, clean the surface on the key and stick on another one. For $4, who cares? As opposed to spending $4 and it not working. That will not be the case with this product.

At its paltry price, I'd say this is a terrific any- or no-occasion gift item for friends, family, students and also from caring co-workers and bosses, and for anyone, really.

This is the kind of perfect little gadget I like so very much – simple to set up, simple to use, effective, useful and very inexpensive. Now, that's value!

'Nuff said. Order some now.
